

Silver-Sorrowed Clouds
by Hanna Peters

You misfortuned yourself
looking for black linings on silver clouds
and passing them around.
You left yourself
at the door
today.

I can see it in your smile
dark enough
to turn your coffee black.

I hope the autumn
reminds you
that even leaves
know what it's like
to lose their colour
when they fall.