

Impossibility
by Jeremy Luke Hill

The mystery of things peels like paint, clings to the bottom of teacups, makes vapour trails of the clear sky and veined deltas of river mouths, sifts sand, flings ash, cracks porcelain, drives worlds with lazy, reckless speed in star-circles, lets fingers feel the water's tain as passing time.